

AIR FORCE SPECIAL VICTIMS' COUNSEL PROGRAM

VICTIM IMPACT SURVEY

- The Air Force JAG Corps developed a Victim Impact Survey (VIS) in March 2013 in order to evaluate the Special Victims' Counsel Program and support provided to sexual assault victims throughout the military justice process.
- In 2012, RAND Corporation conducted an Impact Evaluation of the National Crime Victim Law Institute's (NCVLI) Victims' Rights Clinics. The RAND study was considered in developing the VIS and several questions were drawn directly from the RAND study so that there is some basis for comparison between the SVC Program and the NCVLI Victims' Rights Clinics.
- The initial results provided in this handout represent the responses of only 36 victims represented by SVCs. Though SVCs are currently representing 458 clients, the VIS is not provided to them until the military justice process concludes and the attorney-client relationships is terminating. The survey completion rate is currently 39%.
- Though the current data sample is small, we have drawn the following initial conclusions:
 - Victims are extremely satisfied with the support of their SVC during Article 32s and courts-martial.
 - Victims would recommend other victims request an SVC.
 - Victims indicate that their SVC advocated effectively on their behalf.
 - Victims indicate that their SVC helped them understand the investigation and court-martial processes.
 - Victims are satisfied with the response time for the SVC to contact them once a request has been made. When the request is made through the SARC, it will generally take up to 24 hrs to detail an SVC. This is why it might be 2-3 days until an SVC actually contacts a victim. SVCs make it a priority to contact new clients immediately.
 - Victims understand the scope of SVC representation and that their SVC can attend interviews with investigators, defense counsel, and trial counsel.
 - SVCs attend interviews (either telephonically or in person) when they have been detailed to represent the victim before the interview occurs.
 - Victims indicate their SVC talked to them about how to respond to any harassment or intimidation they may receive during the court-martial process.
